Auto Accidents Happened Fast Near Woodhull Farmer's Place

Watering Trough Carried Forty Feet by Speeding Automobile Last Wednesday—Another Machine Whirled About in Road Friday After Colliding With Hay Rope—Occupants of Both Cars Escape Injury.

were smashed on the left side of the car, rendering it unable to proceed. The machine was towed to Jasper by a wrecking car from Bouck's Garage, while the men were taken to Bolivar by Levi Walrath of Jasper. The driver gave his name as Mr. Adams. The names of the other two men were not learned.

The accident on Friday was even more strange. Mr. Schoonover was drawing hay off a load with a horse fork, and had crossed the road with his team when a car shot suddenly around the curve. Before the machine could stop, it struck the taut rope snapping it in two. The car was whirled completely around by its impact with the rope, but remained upright and escaped without damage to the machine or occupants

A watering trough was moved about forty feet by an auto on the Jasper road last Wednesday, three men escaping practically uninjured. A second accident ended fortunately near the same spot at the Nelson Schoonover farm, Friday when a car was turned around in a pecular mix-up.

Three men from Bolivar were traveling at too high a speed Wednesday for their sedan to make the turn at the Schoonover place. Swinging to the outside of the curve the car crashed into a watering trough, moving it bodily from its location. One man suffered a slight injury to his hand, but the remainder of the party escaped unscratched. A wheel, running board and fender

Retrospection Of Woodhull

Founding the Churches

We, of this highly civilized century are prone to accept as a matter of course those institutions back of whose origin lay human effort and divine inspiration. Are we, reared in the atmosphere of Woodhull's Churches, likely to take for granted their organization and to lose sight of the influences back of their origin?

Early in their pioneer career, the settlers of Woodhull realized the necessity of some sort of substitute for a church organization.

The first religious meeting of the township was held at the home of Daniel Johnson. This was followed by meetings in other homes. In the early part of the nineteenth century the schoolhouse was the nucleus of devotional gatherings, the people meeting there every two weeks and sometimes even oftener.

On October 31, 1831, a Presbyterian Church was formed at the schoolhouse near the home of Worcester Perry. This Presbyterian Church of Woodhull was organized by a minister from Hammondsport, the Rev. Isaac Flagler, and was supported by seventeen members of the community. The first pastor of the church was Rev. Warren Day, the first clerk was F. B. Hubbard and the first elders, Allen Sheldon and C. P. Hubbard.

The first half of the century brought other ministers, among whom were: the Reverends Day and Pomeroy in 1831; the Rev. Rockwell White in 1832, the Rev. Orrin Johnson in the two years 1833 and 1834; the Rev. D. B. Booth and James Cressy in 1839, and the Rev. W. B. Stone and the Rev. M. Welles in 1846.

A new Baptist society was organized in the southeastern section of the town in 1865 with 13 members. The first minister to preach before this organization was the Rev. Sturgis of Addison. He was followed by the Reverends Kennedy, Brown, Longley, Boal and Hubbard, the Rev. Hubbard preaching in the late seventies.

The church was formed at the home of John Kent on November 20, 1835. The first officers among the membership of twenty were Stephen Kent, clerk, and John Kent, deacon. There was no regular pastor here, and, in the absence of a visiting pastor, Deacon John Kent, legally licensed, preached the sermons. In the year 1840, the Rev. Thomas W. Colby became the first regular pastor.

HUCKLEBERRIES GROW HIGH AT CRANBERRY LAKE

The goose may not hang high just at present, but huckleberries do, if the young tree standing in the Advertiser window is any criterion. Instead of bending one's back to pick the berries from this bush, the picker would have to reach up to gather berries.

The bush, or tree, was brought into Addison this week by Richard McCaig whose home is at Cranberry Lake. It stands six feet six inches from the floor and the top is heavily loaded with both ripe and green berries of a good quality and flavor. Taking this bush as a sample, a good sized man would have to reach up to pick from the huckleberry patch it came from, and he need have no fears of rattlesnakes biting his fingers. Local people have seen "high" huckleberry bushes before, but never any that compared in height with the one Mr. McCaig brought in. If the variety persists it might be logical to change the name of the lake to Huckleberry Lake instead of Cranberry Lake.

Miss Rachel Whitman	Jasper	38,740 Votes

One more week and this close exciting race will be over. Each week has seen a change in the standing of the candidates and now the goal is near. Endurance and initiative will be the deciding factor. The above standing represents the votes turned in for publication at the end of the second period.

What a race!

The figures talk for themselves—according to votes published they show how the contestants stood Wednesday night in the great circulation campaign of the Addison Advertiser and Woodhull Sentinel, in which the candidates are striving to win two automobiles and other prizes to be given away at the end of this contest. We predicted in our last issue that there would be interesting figures this week. Now watch for the returns next week!

This paper is naturally proud of the representatives in this subscription contest. On our list will be found representatives of our very best families. We have real people contending for honors in this campaign and when the race is over it will merely be a "survival of the fittest" that will take down the big prizes. There will be no losers in the campaign. Each will be measured by the work performed and their rewards will be handed over to them.

Contestants should put every ounce of energy behind their efforts from now until the end of the campaign. The closing date is approaching—it will be here before you know it.

Up to now the race has seemingly been slow and groggy. The club manager has felt that things were not moving as they should and he has been "down in the mouth", so to speak, but now he can tell the world that there is a real race on between real rivals for the beautiful autos and other prizes.

Advice to Candidates

Don't lag behind, it reflects against your personality and general worth as a person worth while. Get on the band wagon and toot your horn so that the good folks of your neighborhood will know that you are really working to win one of those cars and they will get behind you and help. Your neighbors will be no more interested in your welfare in this campaign than you are yourself. If you don't show them what you are working for they will never take any special interest in your candidacy. Now is the time to show them what you are made of. You can easily win the support of your friends by demonstrating that you are a person that is willing to work and work hard on any undertaking that you put your personality behind.

We are hopeful that the people of this section will take out sufficient subscriptions so that all connected with the campaign will have no regrets. This paper is entitled to your hearty and liberal support. We are demonstrating that this section can be stirred up and what might have seemed an impossible undertaking can be brought to a successful conclusion.

The success of the campaign is in the hands of the contestants and the people. If both do their part the management shall have no room for complaint.

On the Home Stretch

The big circulation building campaign is now entering the last lap of the race, and as the home stretch comes in view the candidates, finally realizing that every minute counts in their quest for the two cars and the other valuable prizes that are to be given as a reward for their hard work the past few weeks, are straining every nerve, and leaving no stone unturned to come in the victor, and by so doing warrant the confidence and support of their many friends and backers.

NOW is the time to give that last minute support, back up your favorite candidate to the limit and interest your friends, as well, in combining to push your choice across the wire a winner. You will get value received for all you give and the satisfaction itself will more than pay you.

The Chevrolet and Ford stand down at the end of the home stretch; they loom as big as a mountain, and the eyes of the excited, nervous, hardworking candidates are focused on them. May the best ones win.

For the past two or three weeks we have been telling the readers of this paper that one of the most exciting and interesting races that was ever run in this section of the country was being held in Addison and Woodhull. More than $2,000 in cash and prizes will be handed out by these papers to the winners in the great race, the largest stakes ever offered in this section.

The leaders are all hard workers and are now bending all the energy they have at their command to come to the final count with a big total. That is conceded. Hundreds of subscriptions are yet obtainable, both new and old. Long term subscriptions will count faster than any other way. Five-year subscriptions will build a big vote. That is the way to build a lead or to hold the one you have. A few subscriptions lost may turn the tide against any one of the racers. It is now up to the most energetic and courageous workers to hit the telling blows during the short time remaining.

Family Pride a Factor

One of the human elements that plays an important part at the close of these campaigns is that of family pride, and there is no question but that element is entering largely into this campaign. All the candidates in this race are representative people of this section and are well known, and this is the reason there is so much interest shown. To go down to defeat in a group like this cannot be tainted with dishonor. They will have been pitted against worthy foes. They are making a clean campaign and fighting a fair fight and we will never hear a whimper from a single individual who fails to score the particular coveted prize that he or she may have in view. Every one of them will be a good winner and likewise a good loser. The winner will be entitled to the congratulations of every one of the entire group.

Public Approval

At the start of this campaign there were a few skeptics who could not understand how it would be possible to give away such valuable prizes for simply getting subscriptions to this paper, but since running across some of the active candidates in this campaign their opinions have changed, and they now realize that there will be but few homes in this section that will not have our paper in their mail box each week for a long time to come, and will be anxiously looked forward to for its complete local news and its fine features as well as advertising in this section. The interest and good will that has been aroused in the people of this section by the enthusiastic candidates in this campaign can mean only one thing—a bigger and better paper and one that the people of this town and county can well be proud of.

TIME FOR THE TURN TO COME

According to the political and business prophets who were so full of optimism last Winter and Spring, the nation ought at this time to be beginning to feel the pulsation of returning business activity.

Signs of the expected upturn are noted by several observers, and there is a general feeling among those who make it their business to watch events that the lowest point of the depression has been reached.

Perhaps the most reliable reports are those made to the National Conference of Business Paper Editors and the Associated Business Papers. According to these 150 publications which are intimately in touch with as many different lines of business, there is no line in which there are now stocks on hand in sufficient quantity to carry on even sub-normal business for very long. Buying must begin within a few weeks, these observers report. As soon as buying begins, factories must increase production.

It is interesting to note that in some lines of business there has been no falling off this year as compared with last, but a definite increase. While some lines have suffered a 40 per cent shrinkage, the consumption of electric current for the first six months of 1930 was 2 per cent greater than in the same period of 1929.

It has been a curious sort of business crisis, in that consumer purchases in general have not been greatly curtailed and wages have been reduced in only a few cases. In spite of all the talk about unemployment, there is no evidence of poverty nor any general economic distress.

Wall Street reports that many large foreign loans will be made in the early Fall. The proceeds of those loans will be used abroad to purchase American goods, thus stimulating export trade. Home mortgage loans are reported easier in some sections and home building is picking up. Bank credits are expanding, indicating that idle money is being put to work.

Nobody can predict the future with certainty. If we could, we would not be running a newspaper but playing the stock market or dealing in grain or cotton futures. But in the long run we pin our faith, as we have always done, on the future of the United States of America. We believe that this country is still moving forward toward the goal of universal and continuous prosperity for everybody and that any set-back can never be anything but slight and temporary.

UP-TO-DATE NEW HOMES

There is a pick-up in building contracts indicated by Department of Commerce reports, and the indications are that small dwellings are on the way back to popularity. But the new buildings are not much like those of a quarter of a century ago, and new homes are conforming to modern methods of architecture, which represents something more than "just a notion" on the part of the owner. Height above grade, portion of basement excavated, thickness of foundation, roof overhangs and insulation of the roof, and with the walls fortified against cold weather and excessive heat in the same way; room size, breadth of stair treads, complete electrical fixtures, and the latest devices in plumbing, with a built-in garage, constitute some of the points of the new home of 1930.

UNSELFISH SERVICE

To Miss Alice Hutchins Drake, a Washington woman, who earns her living by answering wise, and otherwise, questions read by millions of newspaper readers throughout the United States, falls the honor of being one of the Nation's pioneers in broadcasting educational programs.

In 1924 she was invited by Station WRC to broadcast a regular weekly lecture on "Art in Washington", and this was frequently supplemented by week book reviews which she made over the National Broadcasting chain. In July, 1928, she began broadcasting a new series of radio talks. The topic selected was "Famous Paintings of Many Lands". Every Wednesday afternoon interested listeners tune in and to them Miss Drake's lectures have been in the nature of a continuous educational course.

In addition Miss Drake has conducted the Book Lovers' Hour at the Washington Y. W. C. A. on a weekly and every other week schedule continuously for seventeen years, and in that work as in broadcasting, great numbers of persons have found her lectures to be intellectual stimulants, and the knowledge they have acquired through her wonderful funds of information and her desire to help others learn things that will benefit them has placed these people under a debt of lasting gratitude to her. An interesting fact about the "Book Lovers' Hour" is that for all these years the members, without any formal organization whatever have maintained a child at the Central Union Mission purely by the voluntary contributions which the members turn in.

Why does she do it? That seems to be a perfectly natural question and when it was asked of Miss Drake she admitted that her sole reason was that she liked to have people interested in good books and fine pictures and other forms of art because those were things that she loved. It was, as she explained, the way in which she could help others.

This wonderful woman's friends claim that she has broadcast more information worth listening to, entirely without pay, than any living person, being the unquestioned pioneer and champion on subjects of art over the radio. Her services have always been given without charge to the girls and women at the "Y".

FARMERS MUST LEARN BIG BUSINESS

Western wheat farmers who are the capitalists of the agricultural class, declare that American farmers as a whole must learn the principles of big business if they wish to enjoy the benefits of the Federal Farm Board's principle.

Otherwise, Western growers say, in a series of interviews presented in the August number of the Country Home, they will violate all of the basic laws on which industry and manufacturing have been built.

If a manufacturing company finds it is over producing, say the Westerners, production can be cut down by an executive order. If such an order is issued to cooperative farmers, it will be merely a suggestion. Some may withdraw from the organization and outsiders may over produce. Then, they believe, prices will "come tumbling down like Niagara."

The Westerners argue that the cost of raising wheat, a few years ago, was $1 a bushel for some growers and $8.20 for the less efficient. The minimum has been cut since then. Therefore, they say, a cooperative movement would be merely an act of charity to the inefficient. Continuing their argument they express their belief in cooperation if the mass of farmers will learn to operate as big business concerns do. Too many, they say, will enter the cooperatives with the purpose of deriving cash benefits at once. And, if a bad year comes, they will withdraw. There is no power, they declare, to hold the organization together. Good will and a willingness to keep in line with the natural trend will make the Farm Board plan a success, the farmers of broad acres believe.

AIDING ALL VETERANS

In issuing the order for the consolidation and reorganization of all veteran agencies of the Federal Government in accordance with the act of Congress, July 3, the President stated that the change would result in effecting considerable economics in veterans' relief activities and bring about a consolidated budget of $800,000,000. "I regard the step as one of the most important taken since the present Administration came into existence."

Judges 4:1-10

Rev. Samuel D Price, D. D.

Early mistakes can cause many calamities in later years. It was just the case in the history of the Israelites during their conquest of the Promised Land. When Joshua was commissioned to cross the Jordan and possess the land he was told to drive out all the natives, who were given in their idolatries. All too soon the Hebrews were content with the limited area they had allotted to the various tribes, whereas the promise was that they would be victors wherever their feet would tread as they went forward in conquest. Because they stopped short of the command of God almost continuous problems resulted.

Soon the various people that were permitted to remain in the land sought to intermarry and then to interest the Jehovahites in taking up the forms of licentious worship which were indigenous. These made a strong appeal to the flesh and this made them attractive. Further, tribute was levied for the sake of non-attack, or marauding took place after the crops had been garnered. Only when the new inhabitants were all but re-enslaved did they remember from whence God had delivered them in freeing them from the burdens they had to bear in the land of Egypt. Then, though late, when they would turn to the Lord and cry out for His divine help. God's way was to raise up some deliverer who is called a judge. There are at least a a dozen of these judges, beginning with Othniel and reaching to the time of Samson and Samuel.

Though there were many good men in Israel, this time God will act through Deborah. She was a woman worthy in her own home. Soon her influence extended to the community and the people sought her advice as she held a kind of court under the conveniently located palm tree. Being attentive to the voice of God she understood that through her leadership Israel would be delivered from the oppression of Jabin, who often terrorized the colonists by his display of those one thousand chariots of iron. A good leader assigns work to others and Barak was commissioned to assemble ten thousand from the tribes of Israel at Mount Tabor.

When the enemy came forward for attack a God-sent storm broke in their midst and the one thousand chariots of iron at once became a great liability and the dead were piled up in utmost confusion at the crossing of the swollen Kishon river. It remained for another woman to destroy the enemy's general. Jael drove a tent pin through the temples of Sisera while he slept after a hearty meal. Thus Israel was again freed from the oppression of a neighboring people.

This is designated in the Quarterly Temperance Lesson and a significant application comes from the habits of the Israelites during this period of the Judges. They seemed to forget that the facts of the past must be taught to each new generation. The children in every age are the men and women of each tomorrow. The growing youth should have been instructed in the commands of God and further reminded that disobedience would bring oppression from the surrounding peoples. Experience is too costly when each age learns matters anew. There has been unbelievable progress in freeing the nation from the curse of the organized liquor traffic. To-day the law that relates to the Eighteenth Amendment is being sixty per cent enforced. Prohibition is about the livest news in the daily press. One of the greatest needs today is that there shall be more teaching to youth that alcohol is a poison and its use as a beverage is detrimental to life, society and morals.

TOO MUCH PITY

A man who has won high distinction in his chosen field of labor came into my office not long ago. He walks with a limp, for one of his legs is shorter than the other.

He told me that for years he went around on crutches.

"I finally threw them away," he said, "and I'll tell you why. I got infernally tired of having people stop to ask me what had happened. I didn't want sympathy. It did me no good, and slowed up my operations. I'm lame, I'll never be any better. But I can stand the lameness better than I can stand being pitied."

* * * *

There is a great waste or pity in the world.

I know, for example, a couple who seem to be curiously mismated. The woman is ten years older than the man. She is argumentative. She is not a very good housekeeper.

At least a hundred times I have heard somebody say: "I'm so sorry for Joe. He might have picked out a lovely young girl, and see what he went and did."

Now, the simple fact is that the man and woman are exceedingly happy. I personally can't see what he finds attractive in her, nor why she should have chosen him. But it is none of my business, and I certainly am not going to waste sympathy on two folks who seem to like each other and to be perfectly satisfied.

I live part of every year in the middle of Manhattan Island, and the rest of the time in a New England village. My Manhattan friends say: "What a terrible bore it must be to live in a little town. No theatres, no art galleries, no excitement. How I pity country people."

My village friend say: "I like to go to New York for a visit, but what a frightful place to live! Noise, and crime and, rush and expense! The poor folks who are crowded together in those big apartments just don't know what real living is. How I pity them."

What an absurd situation. What an emotional waste!

This seems to me to be a pretty good idea—don't weaken your emotional nature by pouring out pity unless you intend to do something about it.

Pity the sick and relieve them. Pity the poor, and divide with them. Sympathize with the struggles of youth, and lend a helping hand.

But don't get into the foolish habit of being sorry for anybody who happens to be different from yourself. The chances are that he is spending an equal amount of his time being sorry for you.

THE SCRAP BOOK

THE FIRE OF DRIFT-WOOD

By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow

We sat within the farm-house old,
Whose windows, looking o'er the bay,
Gave to the sea-breeze damp and cold
An easy entrance, night and day.
Not far away we saw the port,
The strange, old-fashioned, silent town,
The lighthouse, the dismantled fort
The wooden houses, quaint and brown.
We spake of many a vanished scene,
Of what we once had thought and said,
Of what had been, and might have been,
And who was changed, and who was dead;
And all that fills the heart of friends,
When first they feel, with secret pain,
Their lives thenceforth have separate ends,
And never can be one again;
The first slight swerving of the heart,
That words are powerless to express,
And leave it still unsaid in part,
Or say it in too great excess.
Oft died the words upon our lips,
As suddenly, from out the fire
Built of the wreck of stranded ships,
The flames would leap and then expire.
The windows, rattling in their frames,
The ocean, roaring up the beach,
The gusty blast, the bickering flames,
All mingled vaguely in our speech;
Until they made themselves a part
Of fancies floating through the brain,
The long-lost ventures of the heart,
That send no answer back again.
O flames that glowed! O hearts that yearned!
They were indeed too much akin,
The drift-wood fire without that burned,
The thoughts that burned and glowed within.

14½ POUND BROOK TROUT LARGEST EVER CAUGHT

Here is a challenge to honest fishermen. What was the largest brook trout you ever, not lost, but caught? According to a bulletin issued by the Roosevelt Wild Life Station at the New York State College of Forestry, Syracuse University, fourteen and a half pounds is the largest speckled beauty ever captured and authentically recorded. This statement is made in an article by Dr. W. C. Kendall and Professor Wilford A. Dence, who have collaborated in an examination of the fishes of the Cranberry Lake region in the Adirondacks.

Few fishermen believe that brook trout reach such proportions but the bulletin states that this fourteen-and-a-half-pound fish was taken from the Nipigon river in Ontario and that several trout weighing twelve pounds have been taken from the waters in the State of Maine. Usually the disciples of Izaak Walton feel that they have made close to a record catch if they are fortunate enough to land a brook trout weighing in the vicinity of four or five pounds. In these days speckled beauties of that size are exceedingly rare in the States. But a fourteen-and-a-half-pounder, on a split bamboo rod—well, to describe it would tax the imagination of our most enthusiastic piscatorial romanticist.

In addition to specific information relative to the fish of the Cranberry Lake region the bulletin contains considerable general information on the history and habits of trout and other fish species common to a wide section of the country.

TEMPERATURE

An Italian inventor has developed a heat-cooling furnace for domestic use. The same apparatus which keeps the house warm in Winter will draw the heat from the air in Summer and keep it cool.

Scientists have known for eighty years that this could be done, but the cost has made it impractible. Now Professor E. Guarini, of Milan, claims to have found a practical method of making such a refrigerator-heater.

The use of such a means of artificial cooling requires all windows to be tightly closed. Outside of the United States, however, few people ever open their windows; and it should not be difficult to provide for artificial ventilation to take the place of direct fresh air from outside.

MOUNTAINS

The highest peak east of the Mississippi isn't as high as had been thought. The United States Geological Survey has made a new survey of Mount Mitchell, in North Carolina, and finds that it is 6,684 feet above sea level, or 24 feet lower than former figures.

Only a few mountains in the East approximate a mile in height. Clingman's Dome, Tennessee, is 6,644 feet, only 40 feet lower than Mount Mitchell. Mount Washington, in New Hampshire, is 6,288; Mount Rogers, Virginia, 5,719 feet; Mount Katahdin, Maine, 5,268 feet, or 12 feet less than a mile. The highest American mountain is Mount McKinley, Alaska, 20,300 feet high, with Mount Whitney, California, next, at 14,501 feet.

All the highest mountains are sinking. In a million years even the Rockies may be merely hills, and the Appalachian range a flat plain.

SHERLOCK

The death of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle at 71 removes from the earthly scene the creator of one of the enduring characters in fiction and the father of a new school of story writing.

Educated as a physician, Conan Doyle early turned to literature, and while he wrote several historical novels of great merit, his immense success was with his stories of the super-detective, Sherlock Holmes. Literally millions of copies of his books about Sherlock Holmes have been sold, and the name is familiar wherever English is spoken.

No real detective ever did things the way Sherlock Holmes did, but that makes no difference. What readers of detective stories want is not fact but illusion.

WASHINGTON

In 1932 the United States of America will celebrate the 200th birthday of George Washington. He was born on February 11, 1732, and the 11th was the day which was celebrated as his birthday for many years. But the change in the calendar in 1754, by which 11 days were dropped out of the month of September in that year, made this anniversary, by an exact calculation, fall on the 22nd.

The national celebration of 1932, for which Congress has appropriated $4,500,000, will last from February 22 to Thanksgiving. The President is chairman of the Washington Bicentennial Commission, and each State is to appoint a similar commission. Local committees will be formed to see to it that every child and every citizen has an opportunity to take part in some form of local celebration.

I hope that the picture of Washington as something between a saint and a demi-god, so long perpetuated in the name of patriotism, will be replaced in the public mind by the impression of him as a very human sort of person, but I am afraid not.

SMITHSONIAN

More than 100 years ago James Smithson, a wealthy Englishman who was the illegitimate son of a British nobleman, left his entire fortune to the United States of America to found "an institution for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men." Congress just before adjournment this year appropriated $6,500,000 to add to previous appropriations for the enlargement of the Smithsonian Institution and its National Museum.

Smithson's bequest and the purpose to which it has been put have been worth uncountable millions to America. Research in pure science conducted by the men in charge of the Institution has done more toward the development of our national resources than any other one cause, so those familiar with the matter say. It is the center to which everybody who wants to know anything about American soils, rocks, fishes, plants, trees, insects or animals goes for precise information. It is also the greatest source of information on applied science in the form of invention.

PINKY IS NO STATUE

By Terry Gilkison

Dear Fatso-
Yore letter received and I have knot read it yet' cause I could knot make it out. Down here on the farm I'm havin' a good time and lots of fun. We went swimin' in the swimin' hole yesterday and while I was under the water listenin' to another boy crack stones a kid tied my clothes into knots and I couldn't untie them. So I had to go to the house with nothing on me but a frown and my clothes on my arm. It would have been all right if when I got home if Mom-and the other ladies hadn't been talking to the minister who had called for a visit. Mom turned red as a beet and grabbed a curtain and draped me like a statue. Later she unveiled me and I wished that I had been a statue. I wouldn't have felt it like I did. Yes she used the same brush - and she found the same place - with less trouble. Yore ole friend,

P.S. How's all the Bunch-?

Chapter XX.
BRITISH CAPTURE NEW YORK

THE NEWS of Hale's execution reached Washington at about the same time that fires began raging in different parts of captured New York. The flames were soon beyond control, and presently fully one-fourth of the city lay in blackened ruins. Trinity Church burned to the ground, and St. Paul's was saved only by the courage of a few citizens who clambered to its roof and extinguished the embers as they fell from nearby buildings. Howe was convinced that the destruction was caused by patriot incendiaries, and permitted his soldiers to inflict shocking penalties upon those suspected of having had a hand in the plot. At the same time, he established a strict martial rule over the city.

In the meantime, Fort Washington was being erected at 183rd Street, and the British general sent a company of light infantry to attack the forces encamped in the woods of Harlem Heights. The attackers blew a scornful fox-hunt call on their bugles as they went into action against Major Leitch and his detachment, sent to guard the territory where Columbia University now stands. Colonel Knowlton was dispatched later by Washington to make a flank attack on the enemy, and although these two gallant officers fell in the battle, their men drove off the British and pursued them across a buckwheat field (now the site of Barnard College) mocking their over-confident hunting calls with good effect. The utterly vanquished English force retreated precipitately as far as 105th Street. News of the battle of Harlem Heights put the first real hope into the hearts of the Americans, and the first serious doubt into the hearts of the enemy.

When General Howe moved up and gave evidence of planning an attack, with the aid of his brother, Admiral Howe, in charge of the fleet, Washington left a force under General Magaw in the fort and retreated with the main army into Westchester. There was every reason to believe the fort could be held successfully, but the patriots had reckoned without suspicion of treachery. Careful plans of the fortification, indicating their weaknesses, were drawn up by Adjutant-General William Demont, who confessed in 1792 that he had committed this dastardly act. As soon as the information was placed in his hands, Howe abandoned an unsuccessful Westchester campaign against the main body of the American Army to swoop down upon Fort Washington in four columns of attack. The most important command was entrusted to Baron Von Knyphausen, the Hessian general.

A little outpost at Kingsbridge was taken first, and a peremptory order to surrender or suffer massacre without quarter was sent to Magaw. From the Jersey shore, Washington looked on helplessly while the little garrison struggled to defend itself against odds that he did not suspect. Word that Greene was planning to send aid from Fort Lee, across the Hudson, only reached Magaw after he had agreed to more favorable terms of surrender than those first offered by the British, and the last American stronghold on Manhattan fell into the possession of the enemy.

During the hours of spirited defense of that fortress, the first blood was shed by an American woman in the Revolutionary cause. Margaret Corbin had accompanied her husband from the time he enlisted as a gunner in the Pennsylvania militia, and stood by his side throughout the siege of the doomed fortress on Harlem Heights. When he fell, mortally wounded, she carried on in his stead, and surrender found her still by the gun, although one arm had been nearly severed at the shoulder by enemy grapeshot.

The fall of Fort Washington left over two thousand American soldiers in captivity, and New York became the British prison headquarters for the duration of the Revolution. An old sugar-house on Liberty Street was converted into the most notorious of dungeons — crowed, stifling in summer and wretchedly cold in winter—while in the Middle Dutch Church at Nassau and Cedar Streets, pews were ripped out to make room for thousands of ragged, half-starved wretches who lay so tightly packed together on the hard floor by night that when one moved, all moved.

The terrible prison-ship "Jersey" lay in Wallabout Bay and the unfortunates committed to its dreary hold learned to expect no mercy. By day they were permitted to crawl about the decks, if disease and starvation had left them sufficient strength, but by night they were herded into the filth and darkness below, and sentries who guarded the single narrow grating that admitted air to the hold often amused themselves by thrusting their bayonets between the bars at the struggling, gasping victims. Provost Cunningham's proud boast that he had caused the death of more Yankees than had any battle was probably no idle one, for no less than eleven thousand bodies are said to have been carried away in the death-carts that rumbled daily through the streets of New York, and the guard's morning call at the grating was "Rebels, turn out your dead!" The bodies were often dumped in shallow ditches along the Brooklyn shore, where each tide uncovered human bones. Only in recent years were these tenderly gathered up from the simple tomb originally erected by the Tammany Society near the shore, to find a suitable resting place in the Martyr's Tomb at Fort Greene Park, where a monument rises to commemorate men who could have escaped their fate by taking up arms for the British, but who preferred to die.

While these unhappy sufferers were wasting away in the prisons of New York, a city of tents had grown up from the blackened ruins on the eastern side of Broadway. Long Island, disarmed first by the Americans, now found herself plundered by the British. Her citizens were forced to doff their hats to the officers, submit to raids of foraging parties, and utter no complaint when captured American officers were billeted in their homes. Colonel Ethan Allen, the hero of Ticonderoga, was at one time quartered in the Rapaelje home on New Lots Road, but when he stood on the roof and gave three loud, indiscreet cheers for the defeat of his captors at Bennington, the Rapaelje family lost its boarder. He was removed to the Provost prison and later released by an exchange of prisoners.

DAIRYMEN RECEIVE CHECKS TO REIMBURSE FOR BUTTER FAT SHORTAGE

As a result of the investigation by the Dairy and Food Bureau of the Department of Agriculture and Markets, 125 dairymen producing milk in Orange and Delaware counties have been paid amounts totaling about $1200, of which they were deprived, it is alleged, through inaccurate records of butter fat tests.

The action of the Department against the Prudential Milk Company, of New York City, was under Section 56 of the agricultural law which provides that whenever manufacturers or plant owners receive or purchase milk or cream on the basis of the amount of fat contained therein they must keep an accurate record of butter fat tests which shall be open for inspection by representatives of the Department, and also under Section 253 which provides that the manufacturer must file a bond in the form prescribed by the commissioner to guarantee payment to producers.

The company in question sold its plant last year but at the time of sale there was an amount due producers of milk and this was not paid on the date when payment had become due, according to records in the Department.

After an investigation by the Dairy and Food Bureau checks were finally forwarded to the producers, and continued investigations developed the fact, according to the Department, that these checks in many instances were for smaller amounts than they should have been. A record book was obtained from the New York office of the Company which, it is alleged, plainly showed that, although the plant manager had correctly recorded the various amounts of butter fat contained in the producers' milk, as determined by tests made by the plant, and although the original entries in the record book kept in the New York office had been correct, alterations had been made giving the producers credit for a smaller amount of fat than had been found by the employees of the company at the up-state plant.

A hearing was conducted in Orange County by Kenneth F. Fee, Director of the Dairy and Food Bureau, and the producers were questioned as to the agreement between them and the purchasers of the milk. The Prudential Milk Company was directed to send a representative to Albany to explain the company's position.

It was emphatically denied in behalf of the company that any change in the records had been made. The record book showing test records obtained by the Department was exhibited, according to Mr. Fee, and this, it is charged, plainly showed that alterations had been made. Thereafter checks, made payable to 125 producers, ranging from a small amount to $38.00 were sent to the Department for distribution among the producers in settlement of the balance due them.

Under the provision of the law it is required that purchasers of milk from producers obtain licenses from the Department and file with the department bonds conditioned for the faithful compliance by the licensee with the provisions of the law and for the prompt payment of all amounts due producers for milk or cream sold by them to the licensee.

The evidence obtained by the Department relative to violations of the law on the part of the Prudential Milk Company in the alleged change of records was referred to the Legal Bureau of the Department and is now in the hands of the Attorney General.

Other investigations of a similar nature are being carried on by the Department.

STRIPED CUCUMBER BEETLE

The beetle comes to damage much
The cuke and melon, squash and such.
It's hard to kill the sun of a gun
But we may keep him on the run.

The striped cucumber beetle feeds on cucumbers, melons, squashes and pumpkins. Pumpkins are a kind of "iron ration" for him, however. He much prefers the other three. H. C. Huckett says: "Controlling cucumber beetles is largely a matter of chasing them out of one field into another".

Home gardeners may chase them by dusting their plants with a mixture of one part of calcium arsenate and fifteen parts of hydrated lime. This may be shaken over the leaves through cheesecloth or other coarse cloth. Dust it on lightly, because lime, if used too freely, may stunt the plants.

DANDELION HAS MANY ECONOMIC USES BUT PEOPLE WILL DESTROY THEM

Nobody knows how the dandelion got from Europe to America.

Anyone who has seen the dandelion seeds floating away on their feathery wings—and who has not?—might imagine that they floated across the Atlantic in the same way, were it not for the fact that the wind is always blowing the other way.

Anyway, the dandelion has been with us for two hundred years or more, and everybody who has ever tried to keep a green lawn green is painfully conscious of its presence.

Not that the dandelion is not beautiful. Unlike most weeds, it has an attractive flower, it is almost as attractive when it goes to seed, its leaves are good to eat, and its roots have medicinal value. Really, after all the only thing the matter with the dandelion is that it destroys the smooth, green velvet effect that particular people strive for in their lawns. And that, after all, is merely a matter of fashion. If some fashionable leader should start the fashion of a dandelion lawn, everybody would be trying to grow them!

As a matter of fact the dandelion is cultivated by many people in different parts of the world.

In America as far as most of us go in economic use of the dandelion is to collect the leaves in the early spring and boil them for "greens". In France an especially large-leafed variety of dandelion is cultivated for food. The name "dandelion", in passing, is French. It is a corruption of "dent de lion", meaning "lion's tooth", from a fancied resemblance of the leaf to a tooth.

The French also use the dandelion leaves as a salad, the slightly bitter taste being relished by many palates. The Germans, on the other hand, boil the leaves and serve them as a vegetable and in some localities harvest them for cattle fodder.

When treated as chicory, the roots will produce a winter salad very much like the "barbe de capucin". The roots are also employed instead of chicory for mixing in coffee, thereby becoming both a filler and substitute.

Its most important use is medicinal. The roots are dug up in the fall and dried and sold for medicinal purposes in drug stores under the name of Taraxacum, which is the generic name of the common dandelion. At one time the root was employed as a remedy for many internal ailments, but now is officially used as a mild laxative.

In India, where the plant is native, it has never been used by the natives for medicinal purposes. The Swiss require it to be gathered in spring. It is collected chiefly in Europe and thousands of pounds are exported to all parts of the world. Teas and wines are made from the flowers.

Even though it has economic values, what most of us want to know is how to get rid of it from our lawns and gardens. Complete eradication is impossible because it has gained world-wide distribution. It is thus found in waste places, giving seeds to furnish a good supply for all lawns and parks. The windblown seeds are produced all summer; hence the seeds are found any and everywhere.

To give an idea of the seed production, a controlled plant was observed for a whole season at the New York Botanical gardens. The average number of seeds given by one flower was two hundred. The plant produced twenty-seven flowers during the season; thus from one plant 5,400 seeds were developed. From one field of dandelions, enough seeds are produced to supply many lawns miles away. The seed develop partherogentically, without pollination or fertilization.

Many methods for the eradication of the weed are suggested. The commonest method used is in digging them out with a spud or knife, cutting them so that usually parts of the roots are unavoidably left in the ground. If this method is persisted in, eventually the plants are destroyed, providing that in the cutting all leaves are cut away.

The roots are perennial and have a food storage system, which preserves the plant over non-growing seasons. If no leaves are permitted to grow, the roots use up their storage supply, with the result that the plant starves out. But the requisite is: no leaves must be permitted to develop; otherwise, food is stored and the roots will develop a new plant.

Any part of the root after being cut will send up a new shoot, hence the starvation method will finally destroy the old plants. But this method is bad. Not only is the lawn constantly disturbed and made unsightly by the holes made in it, but it entails far too much work for small results, as many of us know, and it does not prevent the thousands of new seeds blown in from fields and neighboring lawns to establish themselves in the vacated places of the old plants.

One of the easiest methods of getting rid of the dandelion and other lawns weeds is by heavy grass seeding. This method checks the weeds. At the start lawns should be given an extra heavy seeding of blue grass, using five to ten pounds of seed upon a 100-150 foot lot once every three months, say April, July and September. This makes a fine mat of lawn, prevents bare spots for dandelions to get a start and usually gives the lawn the desired appearance.

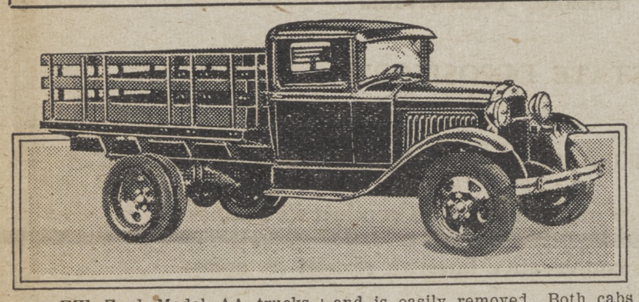
Weeds in general, particularly the dandelion, are sun-loving. Its young seedlings cannot tolerate the shade and the dense mat of a compact lawn. By persistent mowing of the lawn, old weeds are cut down and cannot survive as quickly as the blue grass. They are thus crowded out. If they are not destroyed, the old plants should be cut out. Thus the heavy seeding method is perhaps the best, for it not only destroys the old plants, but it prevents the entrance and the establishment of the new seedlings of weeds in general.

Success sometimes is also had with the use of white clover over infested dandelion areas. The clover, under ordinary conditions, if drainage is good, withstands climate well and is capable of crowding out grass and weeds, but it sometimes dies out due to various diseases which attack it, leaving bare spots and places for the dandelion to return.

The spray methods are often used with success. Weeds in general are easily eradicated by iron-sulphate sprays if properly applied and at the right time. If the spray is fine no injury is done to the grass, but large drops will burn the blue grass. If sprayed about once a month it kills dandelions and the pesty plaintain. The general solution recipe is two pounds of sulphate to a gallon of water. Spray about two or three days after cutting and do not cut for the same length of time after spraying. Care must be taken in the use of the sulphate, because it discolors clothes and stone walks.

In gravel paths and drives, a number of good methods are suggested to prevent the recurrence of weeds after hoeing. Salt can be sprayed to make a white covering of the ground. Washing soda is used, five pounds to ten gallons. Other substances used are carbolic acid, 5 to 10 per cent, copper sulphate, ammonium sulphate 4.100 and hydrochloric acid, 2 to 4 per cent.

New Ford Truck With Closed Cab



NEW Ford Model AA trucks and Model A light delivery cars were announced this week by the Ford Motor Company and are on display in the show rooms of Ford dealers.

Changes in the trucks are principally in the front end, which has been completely redesigned, and in the cab. The radiator is higher with more cooling surface, fenders are wide and flowing, and a black cowl strip adds a note of distinction.

The new Model AA trucks with the four-speed transmission introduced several months ago may be had with enclosed or open cab. The enclosed cab, shown above, is all steel, it is low in appearance yet with ample head room. The open cab is of black rubber top material and is easily removed. Both cabs are equipped with windshields of Triplex shatterproof glass and vacuum type windshield wipers.

Model AA trucks may be had with a platform body, which can be equipped with stakes or a panel body. The chassis has many improvements, including the four-speed transmission, larger front brakes, stronger springs, power take-off opening and optional dual rear wheels.

The Model A line of new commercial cars comprises a light delivery truck with pick-up body, a de luxe delivery truck, a small panel truck and a station wagon. These cars have the smaller wheels and larger tires of the new Ford passenger cars.

METHODS OF CANNING

Safe home canning methods are most economical because they prevent canning failures and insure wholesome food, according to the New York State College of Home Economics. For most fruits, all vegetables and meats, use the cooked-in-the-can method. With this method the cold uncooked or partly cooked food is packed in the jar, covered with water, syrup or juice and then both the jar and the contents are heated simultaneously by boiling water or steam. This is a safer and easier method than boiling in an open kettle as our grandmothers used to do.

Cooking the jar under steam pressure is necessary for safety in canning all non-acid foods such as asparagus, beans, corn, peas, beets, spinach and meat and fish. Though the initial cost of a pressure cooker may seem high, it will prove economical in the long run by preventing spoilage of food or illness which may result from improperly canned food. Pressure cookers are now considered part of the standard equipment for the home canner.

If a steam pressure cooker is not available, vegetables may often be canned with acid successfully. A small amount of vinegar or lemon juice increases the effectiveness of the heating process in killing the micro-arganisms which cause spoilage, and the acid flavor with most of these vegetables is scarcely noticeable. For each pint jar of vegetables use one teaspoon of salt and one teaspoon of vinegar or lemon juice and boil the jars in the hot-water bath for one and one-half hours.

Formulas for durable whitewash that will stick are given in the mimeographed bulletin 35-W. It is free on request to the Mailing Room, Roberts Hall, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.

Tarnish on copper, brass or bronze may be removed either by friction with rottenstone or whiting, or may be dissolved in weak acids such as vinegar or buttermilk.

WHISKEY AND ALCOHOL

Neither of these drugs chould be used as beverages, no matter when or what the dilution. No medicine should be handled flippantly, carelessly or impudently. For most medicines are deadly in overdose. It is the "beverage" item that has brought these two valuable medicines into disrepute, and has divided our people socially and politically to a dimension equal to that of the slavery question preceding the Civil War!

Most rational-thinking men and women will admit that whiskey and alcohol are all right "in their place". Where that place is, the educated physician, it seems to me, would be the better judge.

Once for all, alcohol and whiskey are valuable medicines. When that is said, all is said. Capable physicians need pure alcohol in their offices daily. Great hospitals use it as a valuable adjunct in laboratory and nursing departments. It is little less than crime to deprive the wasting invalid of anything that can possibly aid in bringing about his comfort or recovery—so there!

Whiskey is a valuable stimulant and aid to vital processes in "lingering" or wasting illness, especially in aged patients. Practical proofs have been well known for years. No chemical equation can do away with actual bedside experience. Drunkards are not made here; neither are monkey wrenches provided for political machinery in the sick room of the old and infirm.

Granted with our "dry" zealots, that we could do without alcohol and whiskey; we could as a beverage; we could as a medicine; but you, dear reader, have no right to tell me what I shall or shall not give to my patient, in my efforts to restore him to health; if you assume that right. I shall ignore you. And, you fight beverages all you want to; I'm with you there. But, keep out of the way when I'm treating an invalid!
